In the framework of the project BAAU aims to improve the performance of inclusive education at the university, such as using teaching assistants or specialists to conduct lectures and seminars. For instance, specialists in certain fields of study could teach to address students' needs making thus, education for them inclusive. Another way would be a parental involvement to increase diversity in the education. Inclusion does not only mean to think differently but at the same time it is thinking about multiple ways to reach out to parents on their own terms. In addition, as a university we would suggest to adapt curriculum and make it more inclusive which, in this case, will include locally relevant topics and themes and contributions by marginalized groups. This type of teaching will help to avoid binary narratives of good and bad, and, in turn, will allow adapting the curriculum to the learning styles of students with special education needs. To put inclusive education into practice and make it reality we need, first of all, to make sure that educators and teachers have relevant trainings and resources to teach students with diverse needs. Equally important is the fact that to implement the idea into reality university will need an adequate and sustainable financial support and services. In addition, university supports working together with the entire community - including mainstream and special educators, social workers, parents, and students—to deliver and monitor education, thereby reframing inclusive education as a shared responsibility.
